MEMORY OF ELIZA. The full moon diffuses her mildest ray, And allures my heart, as she floats along, From the sprightly smiles of the circles gay, To offer a tear to the moments gone. Oace gayness I loved, but the charm is o'er, For external graces but transient are, While virtue will shine when we smile no more, And twinkle as bright as the morning star. Yander orb looks down on the silent grave, Where the form of Eliza calm reposes, And long shall the hand of affection wave O'er the mound which the friend of my heart en-

She was beautiful once-but it past away ! Yet leveliness still o'er her visage shone; 'or the mind will emit its most brilliant ray, When the bloom and the vigor of frame are goue.

That pride which misfortune can ne'er subdue, Was legibly written thro' all her woes; While virtue her mantle around her threw. And hallow'd each thought as it sweetly rose. Her spirit was great-and it would not do,

To be to a fortune unequal tied; And the leveliest blossom that ever blew, While expanding in beauty, recoil'd and died! The review is an emblem of sable night, Which wraps in a veil of extensive gloom While soft thro' the cloud as the moon's pale light, Benignly the rays of religion come.

I loved her, and since she has gone away, There is solvee in tracing the scenes we knew. And memory shall bid them in fullness stay, Till I will depart from my sorrows too ! Her spirit was proud-and it could not bear d seorn and neglect to bow;

So it barst its chains and a purer air Expands and enlivens its beauties now. It was on this spot, as the sweet moon threw Her meek fearful beamings, that first we met; Twas here that the tendrils of friendship grew, And around my heart they are twining yet.

But ah! she is gone! and forever gone! And has left me here in a vale of gloom To silently sorrow, a lonely one, As I onward course to a sister's tomb! But a comfort is mine! for this bosom knows That there is a joy in the mid'st of grief; Which a holy calm o'er the tempest throws,
And offers affliction a kind relief. MARY.

TO MY PATERWED PRISED-RAVENSWOOD. The dreams of days have past Like glavious visions o'er the soul, And faney's tide is obbing fast, Nexth reasons sure yet wild control. Romantic as have been those days, And sweet as were their smiling joys, They flee before my cager gaze, As after childhood's uscless toys.

New prospects in my soul arise, New objects flit before my view. New teachers point where glory lies, And ope a range both wide and new. Albeit, I have employ'd my time, In seeking pleasures from my pen; old duty bids me basish rhyme, Nor e'er resume as joys again. When sadness fills the dawning mind And romance dances o'er the sight. Then early passion loves to wind Around the soul its visious bright Then springs to birth its fairy fruit.

Wave in the gentle touch of song; And thrilling from love's magic lute, Unnumber'd plantoms glide along. But these will quickly pass away s gay an The ephenicral beings of a day.

That bloom and early fade again. Such have been mine and such must be The lot of ev'ry feeling heart : To pass life's day spring happily, Untaught by prudence selfish art.

But now amid the busy din, Attendant on life's zenith hour, The confer reason strives to win An object of more lasting power. Ambition of a sterner kind. And far more sold in its aim,

With sway despotic rules the mind And kindles up the torch of fame Then as the cambidates for this. Let sober judgment point the way, A path which many mortals miss,

By passion's dictates fed astray For one, I e'er would wish to find That calm content to virtue given. Which keeps in even tone the mind,

And shows a foretaste here of heaven

OUR SAVIOUR'S PASSION

Behold the astonish'd sun starts back, light his blacken'd beams display, Darkness her sable wing expands, And gloomy night invades the day : But yet the' night maintains her reign planets sail along the skies, No moon, the levely queen of night, o glarious constellations rise ; One dark, black, dismal gloom of clouds, Broods o'er the earth from pole to pole,

One face of horror spreads around, And veils the universal whole. See how the rending clouds divide! Hos forky lightnings giaring fly ; Hark, how the award thunders roar, And gramble thro' the angry sky. The frighted rocks are burst in twain, The evertasting mountains shake, The yawning earth her womb distends, And from their graves the dead awake;

Ten thousand furious whirldwinds rage. long the trembling ground they sweep, And swell, from its immense abyss, The surges of the bellowing deep. Thou deep! why dost thou lash the shore ! Ve furious winds! why do you roar Why do the dead awake Ye hills ! why do you shake ! Why do the rocks divide? Why burst with openings wide? Why do the thunders shake the pole? Why do the volum'd lightnings roll? Why art thou hid, thou sun on high? Thou moon and stars! that fill the sky, Why is your pleasing light, Involv'd in gloom and night? See yonder! where the Lord of life, was he at perfect ease, when in the magisterial character, he was marshelled to church on the Salba'h, by two halberdiers dressed in red costs, the council following at a respectful distance, and the procession brought apectul distance, and the procession bronger up by the town-crier. Even when standing at the plate in his capacity of elder, there was something annoying in being stuck up for the gaze of the public when every other Christian was allowed to pass quietly on, and Christian was allowed to pass quietly on, and in being constrained for half an hour together, with the polite humility esteemed decorous in a servant of the poor, to bob his head to every dull tinkle which the half pence made as they descended into the pewter basin. But the counting-house was his proper element; there he found haself at home; and with his short thick pen firmly compressed between his lips, his squat figure in a well-worn coates, or short cost, of a snuff colour, and a ruler in his left hand, which it was his eustom to retain even after leaving the desk, he felt himself a man of leaving the desk, he felt himself a man of way through the crowd of urchins assembled at the door to see the baillie issue forth in his regimentals when the milits were on duty; and on such occasions it was observed that he frequently reached the rembezons in a more profuse perspiration than either the weather or distance accounted for. Neither was he at perfect ease, when in the magistea West Indian planter, returning to his native country, to breathe the cooler air of the Scottish coast for the brief space it might be his fate to breathe at all. He had gone out to push his fortune when very young, and, from the meanest offices undertaken by Europeans, had risen to be the possessor of a very considerable plantation, with a sufficient complement of the black cattle used in that quarter of the world for its cultivation.

In this predicament, afraid to rest on the damp ground for fear of rheumatism, and determined not to quit the rope by which the hopes of his love and hate seemed to be suctermined not to quit the rope by which the hopes of his love and hate seemed to be mispended, he was fain to carry a stave from the shed, and fastening it by the middle to the iron click of the important rope to rest, his weary limbs by sitting on it astride while he embraced the hempen comforter with his arms. It was in this singular and most unaccommodating posture that he was pointed out by Watt Lee to his trembling matress. We do not presume to follow the thoughts of the worthy gentleman while he sat taking his rest in so unusual a fashion; but it is probable that they may have been somewhat disturbed by certain associations connected with the article he hugged so closely inits union with the projecting beam above, otherwise the swinging mistion he was obliged to undergo, from the rope having already reached its etmest length, and his short legs, being, in consequence, almost entirely raised from the ground, would assuredly have set him fast asleep. As it was, he could not properly be said to be either asleep or awake, his thinking faculties remaining in that cloudy wate which is the twilight of the mind sometimes experienced in the heavy doze we endure rather than enjoy after too much sleep, or when disease or care prevents the approach of sound sleep at all. The ways of Providence are often most experience, but to the eye of faith, there is always some convening evidence, that when the virtuous are affected, their trials are sent to prove, and not to coust; that their preciges may be seen in trouble, and that their executeness is adversity may be like the perfuse of brussed flowers—more powerful in fame of braised flowers—more powerful in P9 effects, and more extensively useful. The whole family had passed the threshold, and had lingered for some minutes in the garden. The wife had given her infant to the garden. The wife had given her intent to the care of her eldest boy, and was gizing through the half-open lattice, into the late cheerful and happy parlour. James Morland was known throughout the country to be an upright and honest man and he soon found the advantages of a "good and he soon found the advantages of a "good report," in a season of adversity; which, to use the emphatic words of the proverb, "true friends," while it rouses into action those energies of the mind, that, in success, might have slept unawakened. The worth of the vessel is not broken in calms. Its value and its strength are only proved by buffetting the tempest.

James was not deserted by his neighbours nor was he fursaken by that friend, who hath promised rest to all who labor and are heavy belev, and who call on Hom for aid. He was in lades, and who call on Him for aid. SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

We understand a meeting of Friends will be eld on Monday morning, at 10 o'clock, at the Green street meeting house, to consider what teps it may be advisable for them to take in he present state of the Society; it being well known that the elders' party have engaged the services of several of the all st counsellars of this city, which indicates an intention of speculing to the civil power to ispossess those opposed to them of any hare in the property of the Society, there by cuting them off as far as in them lies, from all convenience for assembling to worship the God of their Fathers, according to the dictates of their consciences. " Verily it is like going down into Egypt for help."

The same writer alds; " Within tea or twelve years a proposition was brought into our Yearly Meeting, having for its object, a our tearty Meeting, naving for to object, a unformity of discipane, throughout the Con-tment. In order to effect the object, plausi-ble in its nature, and calculated o cater the unwary, it was proposed, that each Yearly Meeting should send delegates to a General Convention, whose duty it should be to torm rules to govern the whole. It is easy to see rules to govern the whole. It is easy to see that had this plan succeeded, the seven Yeariy Meetings on this Continent might have been governed by ten or twelve includibules. It was, however, defeated by the honesty and intrepidity of the more discerning part of our members, and these, for a little season, the society was tall to its usual express." THE ALBANY MURDER.

But little doubt appears to be entertained, that the wife of Mr. Win,ple was accessary to his murder. The Rochester Telegraph says, "it was, we recollect, as ill-sorted marriage, but we never anticipated such appalling truits as these from it. Mrs. Whipsle was the orphan grand-daughter and ward of an idiberal miscrly old thurl, by whom she was denied the advantage of society and education to which her fastime tool entitled her. Her property, it is fair to presume, attracted solitors, from all about, however, it was understood her guardian secluded her. She grew impatient of restraint, and an union was leastly acranged between her and Mr. Whipple, by a female friend, and the parties effect to Vermont and were married. If our competures should prove to be correct, and we fear that they are but too welf founded, the niggard guardian of Mrs. W. will have a fearful responsibility cesting upon him. A quantity of powder was placed under the tutor's chair with a train leading to it, and while hearing their lessons the train was set on fire, and the gentleman, suddenly enveloped in fisme and smoke, sidenly enveloped in fisme and smoke, fled for his life. Soon after, the chapel bell, which had so long annoyed these young worthies by its importunate summons to prayers and recitations, was taken down and it is supposed thrown into the river. A variety of other pranks was played, but vigilant inquiries being set on foot to discover the ringleaders in these disturbances, three of them have been sent away and the remainder are beginning to be satisfied.

AN ODD FISH.

A strange fish—or rather one that the fishermen thought to be strange, until Dr. Mitchell assured them to the contravy—has just been eaught in the New-York waters. Its ribs, we are told, run lengthwise of the fish. The following is from Dr. Mitchell:—This uncouth creature is found in the waters on both sides of the Atlantic ocean within soundings; particularly on the coasts of England and Scotland; as well as along the shores of Long Island and the bay of New-York. Fishermen call it the Fishing Frog, and Naturaliats term it, Lopkius Piecutur. There are many sorts of them, but this is the largest.

ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS.

Since our last, we have found an opportunity of visiting the Academy of Fine Arts now open for its atteenth Anoual Exhibition. The evisibilishment of this Academy in Philadelphia formed an exist in the Arts—anol, shough it was projected and assomptished by those who lead attained eminense in accession, or selebrity for refined tasts, still it must be sonsidered as in no small degree contributing to the caviable rank which not evily now holds in those pleasing and profitable Arts which is a fine and to foster and encourage. The Academy of Fine Arts may in some respect be considered as a private institution, inasmuch as our government does not extend public patromage to the Arts, but the extent of seeing the most valuable of our institutions rise by private losinty, and thrive by infividual exertions, has rendered common many alarnites and associations that under other circumstances would be considered as sacred from intrason of persons or remarks.—Some things, however, rac from a private to a general relation by the extent of benefits which they are calculated to and do, in face, fidines, much has a menistent degree is the Academy of Fine Arts.

And this, dearest gets, is the way to get married.

From the New York Packet, of april 11, 1752 We present to our fair married dames a pic-ture-quie description of the white-washing season, in a letter from the facetions F. H. of Ph ladelphis to he friend in Lombon. ON OUR ANNUAL WHITE WASHINGS.

"My wish is to give you some account of the people of these new states: but I am far from being qualified for the purpose, having as yet wen little more than the clies of New as yet were hithe more than the c bies of New York and Philadelphia. I have discovered but few national singularities among them. Their customs and manners are meanly the same with those of England, which they have long been used to copy. For previous to the revolution, the Americans were, from their infancy, taught to look up to the English as patterns of perfection in all things. I have observed, however, one custom, which for aught I know, is peculiar to this country. An ac-I know, is peculiar to this country. An account of which will serve to fill up the remainter of this sheet, and may afford you some amusement.
"When a young couple are shout to enter on the marriage state, a never failing article in the marriage treaty is, that the lady shall en-joy the free and unmob-sted exercise of the right of while weaking, with all its ceremonals privileges and appurtenances. A young wo man would forego the most advantageous con nexion, and even disappoint the warinest wish of her heart, rather than resign this in-valuable right. You will wonder what this provides of white-washing is, I will endea-your to give you some idea of the ceremony "There is no season of the year in which "There is no season of the year in which the Lidy may not claim her privilege, if she pleases; but the latter end of May is most generally fixed upon for the purpose. The strenuse husband may judge by certain prognostics when the storm is nigh at band. If the lady grows unusually freetal, finds fault with the servants, is discontanted with the children, and complains much of the maxiness of every thing about her, these are signs which englished to be neglected—yet they are not decisive; as they conceiling a corn and profit aught not to be neglected—yet they are not decisive; as they conctimes occur and go off again, without producing any further effect. But if when the husband thees in the morning, he should observe in the yard a wheel burron with a parcel of line in it, or should he see certain buckets with lime dissolved in water, there is then no time to be lost,—he immediately locks up the closet or spartners where it is papers or his private property are kept, and putting the keys in his pocket, betakes houself to dight. For a husband, however believed, becomes a perfect missance during this casion of perfect rage, his authority is superceded, his commission is suspended, and the very scallion who cleans the brancs in the kischen, breames of more consideration and importance than him. He has nothing for it but to shifteste and run from evil which he can teither prevent or multify.

"The hashand gone, the even may begins. The walls are in a few minutes stripped of their furniture, paintings, points and looking there is then no time to be lost, -he imme-such a scene, and you will have some idea of this cleaning match,—the misfortune is that the sale object of which is to make things clean; it matters not how many useful, ornamental, or valuable articles are mutilated or suffer death under the operation; a makeog ny chair and carvel frame undergo the same discipline; they are to be made clean at all events, but their preservation is not worthy of attention. For instance, a fine large engraving is ladd flat on the floor, smaller prints are pled upon it until the superincumbent weight cracks the glasses of the loarer term of the tailer, others are made to lear and against that, until the whole free the corner of the tailer, others are made to lear and glass of a large print are to be cleaned; the spirit and of under the glass is clean and the frame of the tailet through, and spoil the engraving; manutce, if the glass is clean and the frame shimes, it is sofficiantly the rest is not worthy of consideration. An able aritimetocian has made a clearlain founded to hing experiment, and disnevered that the losses and destruction inclined to the two prints in the two white washes are equal to one removal, and three removals equal to one fire.

CLEAN HANDS

Mr. C L , playing at whist the other evening, with an intimate friend, who seemed (as far as his hands were concerned) to hold the Mahometan doctrine of ablution in au preme contempt, said to him, with a countriance more " in sorrow than in anger," " My good fellow, if dirt were trumps what a hand you would have."

THE ORIGINAL OLD BAGS.

A collector of anecdotes of illustrious per-onages mentions that the great Lord Chan-ellor Bacon was reduced to such extreme coverty, towards the latter end of his life, that he wrote to King J mes the first for as-marked in these supplicating terms — " liely me, dear sovereign lord and master; and pity me so far, that I, who have been born to carry a bag, he not now, in my old age, forced to

SAILORS.

The little value placed on money by seafaring people in general, is well known—an honest ar who had lined his pickers with the spoils of the enemies of his country, ordered a huge gold ring to be made. When it was funshed the tradesman told him it was commen to have a poesy engraved on it. Very well, said the scannar. What must it be like, which is the place. Why not out it said her. well, said the scamar. What must it be like replied the other? Why put on it said he, "If hen muney's lost, the ring must ga."
